Terms & Conditions

In simple black and white...

The Basics

Before we start, let's clarify that I don't want any bullshit from you.

I expect you to do the work, not someone else - I'll always be doing my research.

If I find you are not the person I thought you were or you are not the person doing the work, I will terminate the contract immediately.

It is best, to be honest with me about your country, the timezone you will work in etc.

About You

- Only apply if you test your own work.
- Only apply if you communicate well.
- Only apply if you stick to timescales.
- Only expect milestones to be released after allowing time for testing.
- Don't expect milestones to be released for poor quality work.
- Don't apply if you're constantly ill.
- Don't apply if you're always having power cuts and losing internet.
- Don't apply if you're always going to funerals and the same person has died.

The list goes on, but these are excuses over the last 12 years.

One of the most biggest challenges with hiring freelancers is that they overpromise and underdeliver.

Tech Stack

- Use Flutter as the framework.
- Use Firebase for the backend.
- Use Bitbucket for code repositories.
- Use Codemagic for CI/CD pipelines.

Ground Rules

We will agree on milestones and deliverables before we initiate a contract.

- I will fund each milestone upfront for your peace of mind.
- If we've never worked together, expect 25% milestones.
- You will push source code to Bitbucket daily.
- I will check the source code quality and expect you to fix bad code.
- I use Trello for day-to-day project management.

After you bid on a job, we may start discussions. When I say I'll get back to you. I mean, I will get back to you.

If you keep messaging every few hours or daily, I have no choice but to block you. It's nothing personal, just business.